Good Hearted Man

Alyssa Lauren Keeling
Where the water is too deep to cross and the mountains lay weeping where the summer sun is always dawn the hidden truth is sleeping where the wind blows the dripping trees and starlight fills the sea where darkness hides its sulking face I call you here to me where good and evil are both defined and all must chose a side where the river of life is raging and I'm swept into the tide where the winds' are screaming “flip the page”
And all die young so to clear the stage where demons dance jigs around good hearted men and we’re fighting the tide we’re drowning in sin, where the banks erode
and the canyons crumble where mountains fall and turn to rubble where the suns’ so bright it blinds the night and the cowards run and heroes fight it was heaven’s grief that caused hell’s rule you knew what was coming and still played the fool so when kingdoms end and soldiers fall when heroes flee you’ll watch it all behind your mask of sadness and beyond the veil of tears you’ll be smiling profoundly ’cause you’ve waited for years to exact your revenge on good hearted men
It was with you it started and with you it must end you’ll leave no one alive you’ll spare not a soul ‘cause when evils this bad it takes a toll I’ll wait by the river under the stars and watch the world bleeding as we give it new scars